ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The Committee would like to thank all the citizens of British Columbia who took the time from their busy lives to participate in the 2003 Budget consultation process. We appreciated the effort the public made to study the pre-budget briefing materials, to attend and listen to the testimony, and to air their views. The Committee was also continually impressed by the depth and quality of the oral and written submissions.

Our mandate was to listen to what British Columbians had to say about the government's fiscal plan for the next three years. For us, the process of hearing and reading what people had to say has been an enjoyable and valuable learning experience.

The unsung heroes of the Committee's public hearing process included the staff of Hansard Services who produce the transcripts of all the Committee's meetings. We would like to thank in particular the seven console operators who traveled with us to the 13 public hearings — Catherine Schaefer, Marilyn Pollard, Jane Berry, Lisa Coburn, Wendy Collison, Amanda Heffelfinger and Virginia Garrow.

The Committee also wishes to give a huge thanks to the staff in the Office of the Clerk of Committees. Mary Newell and Pamela Grant did an unbelievably good job of organizing our hectic tour across the province. Last, but certainly not least, we would like to acknowledge the contributions of Josie Schofield and Audrey Chan, who were involved throughout all stages of the Committee's work and who provided invaluable administrative and research support.

INTRODUCTION

The report on the 2003 Budget consultation process is divided into four parts. It begins with a summary of the consultation process. The next section provides a summary of the public's response to the fiscal plan. Then, the focus shifts to the public's priorities for the next three budgets and their ideas about how to generate revenue. The final section of the report contains the Finance Committee's general conclusions and recommendations.

SUMMARY OF CONSULTATION PROCESS

Since 2000 the Select Standing Committee on Finance and Government Services has conducted provincewide pre-budget consultations on an annual basis in accordance with the requirements of the original and amended Budget Transparency and Accountability Act.

On May 30, 2002 the all-party Finance Committee was instructed by the House to conduct public consultations across British Columbia with respect to the 2003 Budget, and to report on the consultation process by November 15, 2002. During the fall, we held a series of meetings to fulfil our mandate, following the schedule contained in Appendix 1.

On September 13, 2002 the Minister of Finance formally presented the Budget 2003 Consultation Paper to the Committee. After reviewing the results of the first quarter of the current fiscal year, Minister Gary Collins asked the Committee to seek public input on what changes British Columbians would make in the next two budgets, in terms of program priorities, within the overall spending targets set out in the government's current three-year fiscal plan. He also wanted to hear the public's views on what the government's fiscal priorities should be in 2005/06, when a modest surplus is anticipated.

To solicit public input, the Finance Committee decided to visit 13 different communities across the province. Between September 19 and October 17, 2002, we held public hearings in the following communities: Victoria and Campbell River on the Island; Vancouver, North Vancouver, Richmond and Abbotsford in the lower mainland; Kelowna and Kamloops in the interior; Kimberley and Nelson in the Kootenays; and Fort St. John, Prince George and Smithers in the north. The Committee also invited British Columbians who were unable to attend the hearings to submit written briefs by October 25, 2002.

During the pre-budget consultation process, the Committee heard from 303 individuals and organizations, which represented local governments, key sectors of the BC economy, stakeholders in the education and health sectors, as well as community groups and concerned citizens. In total, 214 oral presentations were made at the 13 public hearings, and 89 written submissions were sent directly to the Office of the Clerk of Committees.

A list of the organizations that participated in the 2003 Budget consultation process and the complete witness list are included as appendices at the end of this report. Transcripts of the public hearings and an electronic copy of this report are available on the Internet at: www.legis.gov.bc.ca/cmt.

THE PUBLIC'S RESPONSE TO THE FISCAL PLAN

During the consultation process, the Committee received a lot of input from the public on the performance of the government over the past year, and on the financial direction the province is taking for the foreseeable future. Other topics covered ranged from “hot-button” provincial issues—such as the softwood lumber dispute, the 2010 Winter Olympic bid and the Kyoto accord on climate change—to industry concerns about specific ministry policies, through to purely local issues.

The Committee has found it a daunting task to synthesize the diversity of opinion we heard and read during the past two months, and to capture the presenters' passion and the quality of the arguments presented. Nonetheless, we think it is important to convey to our colleagues in the House, and the public at large, the memorable messages we received from British Columbians who participated in the pre-budget consultation process.

Based on the testimony we have heard and read, we have identified four key themes that are designed to communicate the public's response to the existing fiscal plan:

THEME 1: STAY THE COURSE ON BALANCING THE BUDGET BY 2004/05

The business community and a lot of concerned citizens clearly stated that they wanted government to stay the course on balancing the budget and getting its fiscal house in order. The Committee heard this message time and time again at the public hearings. Generally speaking, people thought that government has chosen the right track to achieve its goals of restoring sound fiscal management and revitalizing the economy. At the same time they acknowledged that the government would continue to have to make difficult decisions concerning spending priorities in order to balance the province's books by 2004/05, and to address the need for additional funding to soften the impact of economic uncertainty and government restructuring. Some of their comments were:

“In terms of our specific recommendations, CGA-BC believes that it is critical that the government stays the course in its approach to balancing the budget and restoring our competitive position.”
(Certified General Accountants of BC)

“I hope this government understands how important it is to manage my money properly. Like everyone else, I want the best infrastructure, the best health care and the best social services, but I don't want to have those on the backs of my kids who will have to pay for them. Balancing the budget and then paying down the debt must be this government's number one priority.” (Terry Lalari)

“The BC Real Estate Association and the Victoria Real Estate Board support the target of balancing the budget by 2004/05. We also urge the government to continue to monitor economic conditions carefully, remaining flexible in its operation, and including a forecast allowance in each provincial budget.” (BCREA and VREB)

“The Business Council of BC applauds the government for setting firm three-year spending targets for all ministries, and for providing three-year funding commitments to health care and educational institutions. The Business Council recognizes, though, that the spending restraint program is imposing hardship on some communities, as certain government offices and courthouses close. It is important that the reorganization of government infrastructure and services be done in an even-handed way that does not place an undue share of the burden on smaller communities and less urbanized areas of the province.” (BC Business Council)

THEME 2: COMMUNICATE YOUR VISION AND PLAN MORE EFFECTIVELY TO THE PUBLIC

What also came across was the message that government isn't doing a good enough job of communicating its long-term economic vision, or its overall economic plan. People also wanted more information about why the government is reducing the size of the public sector, the reasons for the decision to close one local courthouse or hospital rather than another, and the options considered before these types of decisions were made. Chambers of commerce across the province stressed both these points:

“We would like to reiterate our recommendation to develop and publicize an economic plan. It would help direct future spending priorities. Most importantly, it would ensure that British Columbia regain its stature as the best place to invest in Canada. We are convinced we are on the right track. Let's just ensure we have a map.” (BC Chamber of Commerce)

“One of the most frustrating aspects has been the government's lack of communication with the taxpayers, which is creating uncertainty and ultimately fear. The perception is that the changes and cuts are being made out of desperation to meet the bottom line rather than as the solution for economic recovery. We recommend that in future changes, the provincial government publicly disclose the need for cuts and the reasons used to determine where cuts occur and why.” (Abbotsford Chamber of Commerce)

THEME 3: ENSURE THAT GOVERNMENT POLICIES FOSTER ECONOMIC GROWTH

Several presenters told the Committee that they've heard and support the government's message that BC is open for business. However, in their encounters with certain ministries, they were finding that the government's message has not been communicated clearly enough to the field offices. At the Campbell River hearing, for example, two presenters commented on the local roadblocks faced by industry:

“My first recommendation on what should be done to make your three-year fiscal plan work is to finish your job on reduction and redirection of the public service. Your direction and intentions are not being carried out and are not showing up in the field. The aquaculture industry, the forest industry, and even local communities like ours, face daily frustrations from this problem.” (Mayor Russ Hellberg, District of Port Hardy)

“We hear the government calling for investment by declaring that red tape and the general regulatory burden are being cut and streamlined. These are good messages and encouraging signs, yet there is much evidence to suggest — in the mining industry at least — that the promised changes have yet to take place on the front lines. There is a prevailing notion at the local level that all parts of government are not pulling in the direction articulated by elected officials and ministers.” (Boliden-Westmin Canada Ltd.)

Other people suggested that senior policy-makers inside the bureaucracy also needed to know that BC is open for business. They cited numerous examples of policies or situations that are inhibiting a more rapid economic recovery. These include:

- transportation policy regarding upgrading of private roads, and highway signage policy regarding the advertising of local museums;
- delays in resolving land use conflicts and approving permits for minerals exploration;
- delays in reducing red tape;
- legislative inaction with respect to self-regulation of the auto industry;
- slow delivery of emergency relief to tackle the mountain pine beetle epidemic; and
- uncertainty over the potential impact of the Community Charter.

THEME 4: ADDRESS THE GROWING GAP BETWEEN RURAL AND URBAN BC

The Committee was also struck forcibly by the public’s message that the government has to address the growing gap between rural BC and the urban areas of the province. At the hearings held outside the major urban centres, we often heard that the impact of government restructuring is more painful for small towns and outlying rural areas than for the larger urban centres of the province. Many presenters living in rural BC — whether on Vancouver Island, in the interior, the East Kootenay region or in the north — said that while they supported the idea of a balanced budget, the closure of courthouses, hospitals and ministry offices was causing economic hardship for their communities. They pointed out that the loss of, say, 20 government jobs in a community of 3,000 people has a more significant impact than the loss of 200 positions in a big city like Vancouver.

Cuts to services like child care and legal aid were also perceived to have a more severe impact on small towns in rural BC than in metropolitan areas. People living in rural communities told the Committee that they realized they could never have the range of services that are available in Vancouver and Victoria, but they found it difficult to accept the cutbacks in the few support services they have. For example, in the West Kootenay region alone, there was uncertainty about the funding for six child care centres and other services for children and families. Other people stressed the importance of the child care subsidy for families earning low wages. They included an accountant in Campbell River who demonstrated that single parents working full-time and earning even the minimum training wage could remain in the labour force, so long as they received government assistance in the form of child tax credits and a child care subsidy.

To assist rural BC during the difficult transition period, some presenters in Nelson and Smithers suggested that the government could look at decentralizing some central ministry operations — particularly in the Ministry of Energy and Mines and the Ministry of Forests, which already conduct the bulk of their work outside the metropolitan areas. The Prince Rupert Economic Development Commission, for example, argued that decentralization made good business sense, as public sector services are counter-cyclical. When the commodity cycle is at its lowest, these services keep communities balanced, and they also provide solid support in boom times.

Other witnesses expressed the desire for the East Kootenays and the northwest to have the type of fair-share agreement the Peace region has with respect to the oil and gas industry. They claimed that as their resource-rich regions generate much of the province's export revenue, they should have the capacity to retain some of that wealth for reinvestment in local physical and social infrastructure, rather than waiting year after year for disbursements to come back from Victoria. Revenue sharing, or at least some kind of assistance, would enable wealth-generating rural communities to take care of their own local economies, in the view of some presenters:

“We ask the government to begin working on developing programs and revenue-sharing options and entering into agreements with rural BC to give us the ability to improve our own economic performance.” (Cranbrook and District Chamber of Commerce)

“The District of Houston and other resource communities in the north are seeking budgetary consideration of a fair-share type of arrangement to share revenues from the local forest resources so that the communities may bolster their road maintenance and other infrastructure.” (Mayor Tom Euverman)

“We believe that we're a revenue-generating community, that we provide resources that keep our province going and that all BC communities should be treated equally. As citizens of this province, we believe the rural areas should have access to services like those in the lower mainland, and we'd ask that our message be carried back to cabinet.” (Concerned Citizens of the North Peace)

THE PUBLIC'S PRIORITIES FOR THE NEXT THREE BUDGETS

In addition to including an overview of the fiscal plan, the Budget 2003 Consultation Paper asked British Columbians for their views on budget priorities for the next three fiscal years. The paper poses three specific questions for the public to answer. Question 1 asked people to suggest small changes to fine-tune program spending in the next two budgets, whereas questions 2 and 3 asked them to identify what the government's fiscal priorities should be for any available funds in 2005/06 and how they would allocate the anticipated modest surplus.

The Committee thinks it is necessary to note that only a minority of the 300-plus witnesses responded directly to the Finance ministry's questions in the course of their testimony. With the benefit of hindsight, we think the narrow scope of question 1, which asked people to move small amounts of money from one priority area to another, made it difficult for them to answer. The time frame of questions 2 and 3 — three years down the road — also posed a problem for some.

The public, however, was not shy about telling us what their budget priorities are for the next three fiscal years. Broadly stated, education, health care and roads ranked first for additional program spending now and in the future. Tax reform and debt reduction were also high on the list of things people want government to do, once the budget is balanced. The public's fiscal priorities for the next three budgets are now outlined in themes 5 to 8:

THEME 5: CONTINUE TO PUT EDUCATION AND HEALTH CARE FIRST IN LINE FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

The Committee was struck by the fact that there was more consensus among the witnesses about the need to allocate additional funding to the public education system than to health care. Besides stakeholders in the education sector, the business community, labour unions and concerned citizens all agreed that education is an essential service the government should provide, and an area where fiscal restraint is having a serious impact. They also said that investment in public education was the key to economic growth. In terms of program spending, their immediate and future budget priorities were clearly the K-to-12 system and skills training.

SCHOOLS:

Regarding K-to-12 education, the Committee heard from school trustees and teachers about their struggles to comply with the new funding formula laid out in the Ministry of Education's three-year service plan. Rural schools in the Prince George area and in the Peace region felt that their unique needs were not being recognized in this formula, which ties funding to student enrolment. For example, the Peace River North Teachers' Association pointed out that the formula does not take into account the increased enrolment that happens after September 30, when the freeze-up occurs and work resumes in the oil patch, or the exodus of families following break-up.

In urban areas, a major concern of educators and parents was the uncertainty surrounding next year's funding for school-based programs provided by the Ministry of Children and Family Development.

Currently the ministry is providing annual funding to local school districts for such programs as community schools, inner-city schools, school meals and child and youth care workers. Both concerned parents and the staff of community schools, requested that these school-based programs be funded in the next budget at least at the same level as 2002/03, and that the government consider funding them on an ongoing basis.

SKILLS TRAINING:

The urgent need for skills training was another consistent message we heard. Several presentations by the business community urged the government to progress quickly on the trades and apprenticeship side in order to meet employers' future labour requirements. The Canadian Home Builders' Association, though, pointed out that the housing industry is already facing a serious skilled trades shortage, especially framers. Other gaps identified by presenters at the Abbotsford hearing included the immediate need for a good apprenticeship system to train electricians, plumbers and carpenters, and a shortage of technicians to fill positions in the aerospace retrofit and maintenance industry.

Labour shortages were also a problem in rural BC. In Fort St. John, for example, the local chamber of commerce made a strong pitch for locating the new tech schools in the north country, so that the aboriginal population and other residents could be educated in their own backyard to work in the resource sector.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION:

Some key stakeholders supported the government's fiscal initiatives in post-secondary education. For example, representatives of the province's colleges endorsed the recent decision of government to invest in capital projects at selected institutions. The University Presidents' Council of BC and some individual students were also positive about the lifting of the tuition freeze. However, student organizations and some labour unions disagreed with this decision and advocated reducing tuition fees.

In terms of spending priorities, the major message from the public post-secondary institutions was the need for more operational funding to meet the increasing demand for access to colleges and universities. The province's universities also requested capital spending to upgrade the physical infrastructure, and they made a plea for more investment in research and development.

HEALTH CARE:

Regarding health care, there was broad-based support for the government's commitment to maintain its current level of funding. Generally speaking, the public was in favour of targeting additional funding in the 2003 Budget to relieve the current financial stresses facing local hospitals in the West Kootenays and other parts of rural BC, and the under-funding of the northern health authority, in particular. Some presenters, though, were hesitant to endorse an increase in the ministry spending targets once the budget is balanced. The Vancouver Board of Trade, for example, stated that no more money should be allocated to health care in the longer term, without significant improvements in productivity and management processes and an improved hybrid public-private sector approach to the provision of facilities and services.

Another major concern was the perception that health care costs were being offloaded on to retirees/seniors in the form of cuts to home care support, increases in MSP premiums and Pharmacare fees, and the over-prescribing of drugs. Concerned citizens and community groups made several pleas for the government to at least maintain, if not expand, health care facilities and services for seniors, as well as for other vulnerable groups. Their specific requests for additional funding in the 2003 Budget included:

- Allocate more funding for senior care, offer tax incentives for long-term care insurance, and streamline the funding for health and housing agencies providing assisted living services.
- Allocate resources to provide health services for the drug addicts, the mentally ill and the many disadvantaged who congregate in Vancouver's urban core.
- Allocate $300 million over the next three years towards community support and rehab services for people with acquired brain injury.
- Protect the respite services provided for parents of special needs children at the Queen Alexandra Centre for Children's Health in Victoria.
- Restore routine eye exams for those aged 19 to 64 who are on income assistance, a service that costs about $1 million a year.

THEME 6: INVEST IN TRANSPORTATION INFRASTRUCTURE NOW AND IN THE FUTURE

Investment in transportation infrastructure to give business a competitive edge was another recurring theme at all the public hearings. Presenters clearly identified this as their top priority for capital spending and perceived this type of expenditure as a way they could enhance business activity in their own communities. The City of Fort St. John, for example, urged the government to focus whatever surplus resources are available on transportation infrastructure — whether that's the vital link provided by regional airports, BC Rail, urban highways or rural road systems.

Investment in roads was identified as a high priority in all regions of the province. Indeed, some witnesses firmly believed that the fiscal recovery is put at risk, due to the lack of highway capacity as the economy expands. They saw the construction and upgrading of the province's highway system as the key to economic development in all parts of the province, to enable goods and services to move quickly and efficiently from region to region. However, their perception was that the provincial government has tended to focus for too long on highway maintenance rather than making major investments in the construction and upgrading of roads.

Being aware of the fiscal constraints facing the province, the transportation committee of the Abbotsford Chamber of Commerce proposed that one way to finance the investment in roads would be for the government to lobby Ottawa for a greater share of the road fuel tax revenues it collects from BC drivers. Its members told the Committee that the lower mainland pays the highest fuel tax in Canada, with the federal government collecting $1.3 billion in road fuel tax revenues in BC during the 1995-98 period but only investing $127 million — less than 10 percent — back into the province's roads. They urged the government to take a strong and loud leadership role and keep the revenue from the excise tax on fuel for BC roads. The Nelson Chamber of Commerce also proposed that the province target the federal portion of the excise tax into building and maintaining the highway system, and that the government explore using 50 percent of the vehicle licensing fee and adding, say, a surcharge of $25 to the auto insurance premium. This way $100 million would be available for infrastructure improvements each year.

Within the different regions, presenters targeted the following transportation infrastructure projects as priorities for government assistance:

- construction and upgrading of roads in the north;
- expansion of the Cranbrook airport in the East Kootenays;
- upgrading of the Kamloops airport;
- development of the Port of Prince Rupert as a container port in the northwest; and
- constructing another Fraser River crossing and upgrading the Albion ferry and the Mount Lehman overpass in the Fraser Valley.

THEME 7: CONTINUE TO REFORM THE TAX SYSTEM TO HELP REVITALIZE THE ECONOMY

Almost without exception, representatives of the business community welcomed the corporate income tax cuts, the repeal of the corporate capital tax, the elimination of the PST on machinery and equipment, and the reduction in the top marginal income tax rate. However, they identified the need to make BC's tax system more competitive with other jurisdictions. To level the playing field with Alberta, for example, presenters in the East Kootenays and the Peace region urged the government to consider adopting a differential PST rate for the border towns of BC to stem the estimated loss of approximately $230 million in retail revenue each year to Alberta.

Another concern was that if Alberta continued its aggressive tax reduction program, British Columbia could perhaps fall behind in the future unless the Ministry of Finance announced what the future tax rates would be here in BC. The BC Institute of Chartered Accountants, for example, suggested that the 2003 Budget provide specific year-by-year tax rates that provide certainty for investors comparing British Columbia to other jurisdictions.

The province's chartered accountants also proposed two other tax policy changes in the next budget to assist business: a gradual reduction of the general corporate income tax rate to 8 percent, and a gradual increase of the small business threshold from $300,000 to $400,000. They also suggested harmonizing the federal GST and the PST in the 2003 Budget to reduce compliance and administrative costs for business, and to increase PST revenue currently lost on e-commerce sales. The BC Agriculture Council also favoured harmonization, stating that the adoption of the GST farm input tax credit system would realize significant cost savings.

Other presenters also found complying with the PST rules required too much paperwork and imposed extra costs. The owner of a Victoria-based company, for example, described the complexity of the PST regulations as an "onerous burden to BC business," pointing out that the GST collects roughly the same amount of tax but requires one-tenth the effort for a business to administer. His request was for concise rules and simple administration.

The Committee also heard some concerns, especially from small and medium-sized businesses, about the negative impact of the 0.5 percent increase in the provincial sales tax. For example, representatives of the retail sector were worried about its impact on consumer spending and called on the government to reduce the PST when the deficit has been eliminated.

Requests for PST exemptions on port terminals and for the film industry were also made to increase the competitiveness of these sectors. In addition, the Business Council of BC proposed exempting more categories of business inputs from the 7.5 percent sales tax, by extending the existing exemption to also include energy, building materials and legal services. The Council also called for the phasing out of the provincial capital tax on financial institutions in BC.

THEME 8: PAY DOWN THE DEBT

Another clear message from the public was the need for the government to start planning how it proposes to pay down the debt so as not to saddle future generations with debt-servicing costs. Several witnesses thought it was important for the government to announce its long-term debt management plan in the next two provincial budgets, with measurable targets identified in 2005/06. This plan would be a signal to investors outside British Columbia that they would not be stuck with a large amount of future taxes to reduce the debt, if they invested here.

In terms of the proportion of funds to be allocated for debt reduction, once there is a modest surplus in 2005/06, the public proposed percentages ranging from zero right through to 100 percent. While they disagreed over the proportions, there was general agreement among concerned taxpayers and owners of small and medium-sized businesses on the desirability of targeting some funds in 2005/06 for debt reduction, as the following quotes show:

“We now have a provincial debt of $36 billion, and a huge amount of our tax dollars has to be spent on interest alone. Not only must you produce a budget that’s sustainable, but debt-servicing costs must continue to spiral downward so that my children will be able to live in BC without spending all of their earnings on taxes.” (Jim Krauss)

“Once the BC government balances the budget in 2004/05, it then needs to go down the long road of reducing debt. I urge the government not to spend on the backs of future generations.” (BC3P Consulting)

“We would encourage you to make debt reduction a high priority. There is nothing more debilitating to government, business or to individuals than debt. It limits growth today and diminishes future potential.” (Aquila Networks Canada Ltd.)

THE PUBLIC'S IDEAS ON HOW TO GENERATE REVENUE

The need for the government to focus more on revenue generation was another very clear message we heard at the hearings. The public's ideas are summarized under themes 9 and 10.

THEME 9: BE CREATIVE ABOUT GENERATING REVENUE VIA ECONOMIC GROWTH

Every community we visited wanted to be part of revitalizing the economy. People pointed to the obvious advantage of achieving a balanced budget through revenue enhancement rather than by simply cutting program spending. Despite this, they perceived that the focus of government has been more on cutting jobs and services and allocating expenditures, rather than concentrating on building the economy — a focus that would generate the revenues required to fund the services desired by British Columbians. In fact, the Business Council of BC urged the Committee to make economic growth “the centrepiece” of our report to government.

The public had a lot of different ideas about how to promote economic development and generate additional tax revenue.

With regard to marketing, people made the following suggestions:

- Adopt a Buy BC policy for hi-tech products developed locally.
- Market the north of BC as a world-class tourist destination.
- Match the wine industry's investment of $500,000 a year for market development and the promotion of wine industry tourism.
- Promote the province as a can-do place by working with local market experts.
- Sell BC as a desirable location for the film industry, by restoring the budget of the BC Film Commission and its mandate as an international marketing body, by continuing to fund regional film commissions and by expanding regional tax incentives to create jobs.

To expand the resource sector of the provincial economy, some ideas were:

- Adopt the five-point plan of the mining industry and spend more money on minerals exploration to improve the competitiveness of this sector.
- Collaborate with the upstream oil and gas industry to find ways to encourage and fast-track exploration for existing and new basins.
- Mobilize companies that have excess manufacturing capacity to become involved in the oil and gas industry, and develop a framework for first nations participation in energy exploration and development.
- Develop a land-leasing program to encourage the establishment of wind-generated power on the North Island.
- Expedite shellfish aquaculture to create jobs.
- Increase the number and size of woodlots in rural BC.

To attract more investment, the business community put forward such ideas as:

- Adopt a sectoral approach to regulatory reform that would identify on an industry basis the three or four most important regulatory impediments to new investment and the expansion of existing businesses.
- Provide speedy access to venture capital for small hi-tech companies.
- Redirect small business venture capital programs into resource-based regions.
- Use flow-through shares as drivers for public-private partnerships for infrastructure projects and to encourage other types of investments.

THEME 10: LOBBY OTTAWA FOR MORE DOLLARS

The Committee heard quite often throughout the public hearing process that people wanted the government to lobby the federal government for more health care dollars, and for a more equitable share of the large sums generated by the federal excise tax on gasoline. Requests were also made for the province itself to contribute funds as a partner in cost-shared initiatives or P3-type projects, in order to leverage additional monies for the agricultural industry, the high tech sector and for the indirect costs of university-based research.

Simply improving dialogue and relations with Ottawa would also have other spin-off benefits for the provincial economy. As one local mayor pointed out, the federal government holds the keys to the expansion of BC's aquaculture industry and the establishment of an offshore oil and gas industry, and to resolving the softwood lumber dispute, all of which are critical for the province's economic recovery.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

After due consideration, the Committee believes the government should stay the course and continue with its plan to balance the budget by 2004/05. We recognize that budget-making involves making difficult choices at the best of times, and that the financial decisions about any additional spending in the next two budgets will have to be made within the constraints of the existing fiscal plan and the ministry spending targets.

Nonetheless, based on the public's compelling testimony, we think some fine-tuning is needed in the next two budgets to assist British Columbians living in rural resource-dependent communities, to assist rural and urban schools adjust to the new funding arrangements for K-to-12 education, to secure investment for improving the province's transportation infrastructure, and to help the working poor with their child care costs. Therefore we recommend:

1. That the government provide some form of assistance in the 2003 Budget to resource-dependent rural communities, affected by government restructuring and the softwood lumber dispute, during the difficult transition period.

The Committee thinks the growing gap between rural British Columbia and the large urban centres has to be addressed now. The situation is becoming critical for resource-dependent communities hit hard by the combined impact of the government's restraint program and the current economic uncertainty in forestry and the mining sector.

2. That the government give serious consideration to providing additional transitional funding for the K-to-12 education system.

During the public hearings, the Committee was struck forcibly by how much financial pressure educators working in the K-to-12 system seemed to be experiencing as they try to adjust to the new funding formula for school districts. We think the shortage of funds is reaching a critical stage for rural schools and schools-based programs in urban areas.

3. That the government consider making transportation infrastructure a top priority for capital spending now and in the future.

The Committee thinks it is essential to have a quality, integrated transportation network to serve as the backbone for the economic development of all regions of the province and to realize the full potential of the province's natural resources.

4. Finally, another fine-tuning adjustment the government could consider making is to raise the current income threshold for the child care subsidy.

The Committee thinks there is a strong case for assisting parents who qualify as the working poor with their child care costs. We are concerned that the recent reduction in the income threshold can act as a disincentive to keeping a job, or to securing paid employment, for a significant number of people.
