Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II
Queen of Canada

The Crown in Canada

Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, Queen of Canada, is the sixth sovereign since Canadian Confederation in 1867.

Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and The Duke of Edinburgh speak with Iona Campagnolo, Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia, 2002.

Canada's System of Government

Canada is a constitutional monarchy with a parliamentary system of government. Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II is the Queen of Canada and is Canada's Head of State.

As a constitutional monarchy, the duties of Head of State and Head of Government are separate and distinct. The power to govern is vested in the Crown but is entrusted to the elected government on behalf of the people.

This balance between the roles of the elected representatives and the Crown was established in both the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Constitution Act, 1982, and provides a stable influence which is a hallmark of Canada's political tradition.

Canadian Representatives of the Crown

The Governor General serves as the representative of the Queen in Canada. The Queen is also represented by a Lieutenant Governor in each of Canada's ten provinces.

These representatives are non-partisan and non-political and are appointed to exercise the powers of the Crown in Canada.

Since 1871, the Lieutenant Governor has served as the representative of the Crown in British Columbia. The Lieutenant Governor fulfills the duties of the Crown in the province and maintains the vibrant link between the Queen and the elected representatives on a daily basis.

Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II celebrates 60 years on the throne in 2012. The UK and many Commonwealth nations have held celebrations and events to mark this historic milestone. On February 14, a Diamond Jubilee Celebration at the Parliament Buildings in Victoria welcomed members of the public and school children. The event featured the raising of the official Diamond Jubilee Flag and addresses by the Lieutenant Governor, the Premier, and the Speaker and Clerk of the Legislative Assembly.

The panel above forms part of a Diamond Jubilee exhibit currently on display in the Reception Hall of the Parliament Buildings in Victoria.
